

Local researcher to cycle Etape Loch Ness for rare skin disease research

Dr Neil Rajan, 39, is taking on the Etape Loch Ness cycle to raise money for rare skin disease research. The Newcastle-based researcher is taking on 66 mile cycle takes place on Sunday 23rd April around Scotland's iconic Loch Ness, starting and ending in the Highland capital of Inverness.

'The reason I'm taking part in this event is to put something back into the British Skin Foundation's research funding pot,' explains Dr Rajan, after receiving BSF funding for a rare skin disease project that affects families in the North East of England.

The skin condition, called CYLD cutaneous syndrome results in large skin tumours called cylindromas that grow on the face and scalp. 1 in 4 affected patients eventually undergo complete scalp removal.

Dr Rajan, a consultant dermatologist at the RVI, leads a Dermatogenetics research group at Newcastle University based at the Institute of Genetic Medicine, Newcastle. The aim of the project is to understand a certain aspect of how the skin tumours grow and if specific signals in the tumour can be blocked with new drugs.
